Let' s talk about race pictures

In these missions we find a lot of treasure. We saw a lot of wild horses. We drank pure mountain water, we also saw giant flowers, ducks, but what really found was friendship and learn how to love the wild nature and stay connected to the motherland, besides we met some good friends. Back home, we talk about the beautiful jewek we have in the house that nice mom that takes care of us. All the things that we've got in the house make our lives easier to have. Well this is all I just want to share with you our ultimate adventure and how to spend some quality time with my kids outdoors. The care, commentary and proportions. What's In a NameDid have you ever wondered where the turkey got its name? While turkeys originate from North America, the birds have received their names in honor of the country, Turkey. When American tourists first came across the birds, they saw animals that looked like birds from home called Turkish Birds. Turkish birds related to African guinea pigs passed through Turkey to settle in Europe during the Middle Ages. The similarity between European Turkish birds and North American birds makes the name sticking Turkey / Dinosaur Link Making a wish on the wish bones of turkey is an interesting tradition shared by many after enjoying a turkey feast. Wishbone that's not just a passing game. It is a direct link to the pre-historical lineage of turkeys, as suggested by Live Science. As it turned out, Tyrannosaurus rex and Vellicraptors also had collarbone, also known as furcula. Turkeys are almost extinct At the same time, experts estimate about 10 million turkeys live in the United States. After the arrival of early settlers, that population gradually declined. In the 1930s, hunting and development destroyed the habitat of wild turkeys that almost pushed these birds to extinction. Conservation efforts have been successful and wild turkey populations are now somewhere around seven million according to what wildlife biosyntheticist Tom Hughes said in an interview with The Dodo.Turkeys Leave the Nest at a Young AgeBabies, known as poulitices, which were born with feathers. Poult are self-sufficient so fast that young birds usually leave the nest within about 24 hours. Poult go out with their mother in search of food. A male turkey rarely plays a role in raising its young. The average life expectancy of a turkey is 3-5 years, although the oldest wild turkey on record lives to 13 years, according to The Spruce.Gobble, Gobble Did you know that one way to tell the difference between male turkeys and female turkeys is to listen to their gobble? Males make special sounds to inform their appearance with females, communicate with their home beams and warn of danger. That is why males are often called gobblers, in females are called hens. Also noteworthy- a gobble of turkey is so big that it can be heard from up to a mile away. Benjamin Franklin respects TurkeysOne's American founding father, Benjamin Franklin, has such respect for the birds that would have preferred turkey as the symbol of the nation instead of the bald eagle, as noted by Live Science. He wrote a letter to his daughter showing he felt that turkeys were more respectable birds than eagles. He is also a fan of the indigenous status of turkeys. While eagles have been found in other countries, turkeys are specific to america. Blush WattlesThe exposed skin on the head and neck of a turkey, commonly known as its wattle, changes color according to the mood of a turkey. During the mating season, wattles of male turkeys turn bright red in response to sex hormones. During illness, fear or agitation, the snood (which shines odd flesh on its forehead) can transform from its normal blue-gray or pale pink to bright red, white or blue. Go to Learn what children understand about racial differences and how to talk to them about it in our age guide. One day you're standing in the elevator and your 3-year-old points at a person of a different race, blurting out, Mom, that man has a funny colored skin. What do you say? We've highlighted what kids understand about race and how to talk to them about it. The study found that babies recognize differences in skin color and hair texture, said Rebecca Bigler, Ph.C., an associate professor of psychology at the University of Texas at Austin who has studied children's racial attitudes. Even before they can talk to their children, parents can teach through their actions. Also, do your best to bring your child to a diverse environment. It is important for children to see their parents interact socially with people of other racial and ethnic groups. While it is important to talk about physical differences (hair type, skin and eye color, and even height), you should also call attention to the special talents inherent in diversity. Everyone is special, and this is especially because his family can speak a different language, said Harriett Romo, Ph.C., director of the Institute for Child and Adolescent Policy Studies at the University of Texas at San Antonio. This way, you'll teach them to focus less on how someone looks and more on what they offer. As children become more young, it is normal for them to naturally start talking about skin tone. So help your child by responding with a calm, positive tone, Yes, he has brown skin. It's not like yours, but it's also a really nice color. It's also good to put up physical differences of people before your child does. A smart time to do this is when you are playing with toys and have shown different physical attributes: This doll has a hat on, which one does not; this person has dark skin, he does not. Related: How to Talk to Your Kids About Race It's common for children this age assign positive traits to people of their own ethnic group and negative traits to people who look different, says Dr Bigler. As a result, you may hear disturbing comments such as that boy has her eyes or skin are filthy. The best way to respond is to resolyt these claims calmly, frankly (Her skin is not dirty, it's not like yours. People all have different skin colors). Talk to them about smashing stereotypes by learning about important contributions made by people of color. Series of chapter books like Who Was? illustration of the achievements of men and women such as Jackie Robinson, Malala Yousafzai, and Frida Kahlo. Celebrate your child's cultural strengths, and encourage them to step up it. For example, if you see someone struggling with a language barrier, help them out and tell your child, 'See how important it is that we speak two languages and can help [translate].' Dr Romo said. Racial attitudes tend to improve in this age group. Children become more likely to absorb the idea that we are different and the same at the same time, so emphasize this concept whenever possible, says Dr Bigler. For example, if your child indicates that a friend at school has a different hair texture than him, say, Yes, his hair is not like you, right? But they both love playing baseball. It is important to seek to point out the similarities so that your child has no idea that children of a different race are very different from him. Older children are also more likely to be exposed to news of racial and stereotypical inequality, whether in the classroom or at home in evening broadcasts, so it's important to dispel cultural myths. To make them understand that you shouldn't make generalizations about people before getting to know them, say, 'Some kids like vanilla ice cream, but not all kids like vanilla ice cream, so you can't make a statement that applies to everyone in a group.' © right. I've been a PC gamer since I was eight years old and my parents brought home our first computer. It is built around an 80286 processor clocked at 10MHz, with 1MB of RAM (640K base, 384K expansion), 20MB hard drive and EVGA card connected to the MULTISync II NEC display. While overtaken by most modern toasters, it has been reasonably superior for 1987, and it offers thousands of hours of adventure, exploration, and imagination. Nearly 30 years later, I still love gaming on my PC. I've owned consoles and played games on them from time to time, but computers are the love of my gaming life. Pc gaming means having access to a cycle of hardware improvements, user-generated mods, and total conversions, and the most accurate, flexible tool set ever created for calculations:

mouse and keyboard. I truly believe that computers are the best gaming platform ever invented, and while I mainly cover hardware and technology, I'm excited My work at ExtremeTech allows me to occasionally write about games and gaming as well. What am I Happy about is how the discussion about gaming often devolve into ragging on console players and repeated assertions of pc Master Race's superiority. Guys, we need to talk about this. The origin of the overall raceLet I started by saying that I had read pcmasterrace subreddit dictionary, its differences between those who own a console and so-called farmers, and his argument for why computers are objectively superior. I know that the general use of this phrase means to show those who exhibit deliberate intelligence regarding the objective superiority of computers on consoles, and that the subreddit states We do not use the term to put themselves above other gamers. We use this term to put our PC on top of the dashboard. It's not people, it's the foundations. I accept that's the intention. I also accept that many people flying the Confederate flag really believe they are proving a love for their own cultural heritage rather than explicitly advocating racism or racist behavior. But when you borrow the language of the actual Nazi party, you inevitably borrow the effects that others attach to that ideology - so much so, in fact, that pc Master Race subreddit has many links and details about how it is not really intended to discriminate. If you need to put a lengthy disclaimer and an explanation of your self-proclaimed title, maybe it's time to find a better brand. Images like this really don't help claiming that there is no connection between Nazi ideology and the Master Race concept. Photos from this video on YouTubeThe other problem I have is with the way from farmers being thrown around in conversations. The Nazi Party has views on farmers and farmers that can be politely described as bipolar. On the one another, calling on farmers and land was an important component of Nazi ideology, honoring German farmers and rural life. The doctrine of Blut und Boden (Blood and Soil) argues that farmers are simply the cornerstone of German society, a bulwark against invasion, and establishes a moral compass that those living in cities have forgotten. This glory is more rhetoric than reality – Germany has not tried to systematically dismantle its cities or force its population to return to rural, agricultural life. The problem with juxtaposing farmers and the overall race is that the Germans only keep German farmers in such high interest. Their plans for farmers in the territories they captured were spelled out in generalplan ost. Put simply, Germany intends to resetid tens of millions of people, starved them to death due to food shortages, and kept farmers stocks on hand to serve as a slave and agricultural workforce. As the German population in the conquered territories increases, a group of people of was selected for Germanization. Everyone else either worked to death or was deported to locations like Siberia. Education for farmers living in and Eastern Europe was limited to the most basic extent possible, their cultural expression was forbidden, and their children would be kidnapped and brought to Germany to be forcibly reeducated. The long-term plan was to sterilized Polish farmers, ban them from marriage, and ban all medical aid to people of Polish descent. GeneralPlan Ost.Again, I'm not accusing people who call themselves PC Master Race of wanting to commit genocide against so-called farmer consoles. But there is an incredibly ugly history behind this language, and as someone who studies both history and political science, I wince when I see this kind of language flung through our commentary topic. Is this the best name we can come up with? My view of gaming and consoles is simple: I believe people will be able to play the games they love on the platform they like. I'll tell anyone asking that I believe computers are the best platform to game on – and I'll do it without mentioning them as a farmer, console or otherwise. I don't need to belong to PC Master Race to confirm my love of pc gaming, and urge every farmer and denigrating console to ignore decades of literally great gaming history. I loved the Final Fantasy series when I was growing up, even if I had to play at a friend's house. Resident Evil 4 on a borrowed Gamecube is one of the best games I've ever played, even if I see limited controls. I was thinking about buying a PS3 used just to play The Last of Us, because I've heard a lot of good things about it. I wasn't stopping being a pc gamer just because I enjoyed a round of Super Smash Brothers or Mario Kart.Those of you who have interacted with me in comment topics know that I like vigorous debate and discussion. ET did not announce some changes to our comment policy or threaten to evict people from the site to appeal to every farmer. But there must be a way for the PC gaming community to be proud of the capabilities of our chosen platform without using the Nazi terminology – even if it doesn't mean the same way. It should also be noted that the original meaning of the term was to mock individuals who acted as if they belonged to Ubermensch, rather than confirming it. With that, let's turn it over to you: Is this the best name we can think of? Let us know what you think in the comments below. Below.
